

Ancient Egypt

On my trip to Albany Institute of History and Art I learned that the rich people wore nail polish, fake eyelashes, and penciled on eyebrows. I saw real life mummies. One was wrapped and the other was unwrapped. The most interesting thing we talked about was that the sons of the pharaohs wore cool cobra crowns. Another crazy thing was that they wore a type of head cover that got melted by the sun and was turned into deodorant. By: Daniel Making ushabtis was my favorite part of our trip to the Albany Institute. The Ancient Egyptians believed that the ushabtis can grow into life-size and do the pharaoh's chores. They put a curse on them to do this.

If I was them, I would want my ushabti to take out the trash because that is a pain in the neck for me to do. By: Jayda

Today I went to the Albany Institute of History and Art. It was fun. I learned when you take the water out of a mummy it will get smaller and smaller. When I was there I saw mummies. One was a man and the other was a woman. The man was unwrapped a little, but the woman was not. By: James
